Uniformed Division Background Information

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

WHITE HOUSE BRANCH

The Uniformed Officers assigned to the White House Branch provide physical protection to the White House Complex through the effective use of fixed posts, foot beats, bicycle patrols and police cruisers. These officers also process thousands of Staff members, other workers, members of the press and appointments into the White House Complex on a daily basis. In addition to these responsibilities, personnel assigned to the White House Branch perform similar functions at the Treasury Building, the New Executive Office Building, the Eisenhower Executive Office Building and other locations which may contain Presidential Offices.

The men and women of the Uniformed Division have always taken great pride in providing a safe and secure environment for the President of the United States, his immediate family, the Vice President, their Staff members and the myriad of other White House employees that work here each day.

EXPLOSIVE DETECTION CANINE UNIT

The Explosive Detection Canine Unit's mission is to provide a safe and secure environment for individuals and locations protected by the United States Secret Service. This coverage includes, but is not limited to, Security Sweeps, Bomb Threats, Suspicious Packages, Vehicles, and Material Examinations. The Canine Unit provides this coverage 24 hours a day, seven days a week, in support of the White House Complex, Foreign Missions Branch, and the Vice President's Residence. The Canine Unit also provides support to the U.S. Secret Service Protective Details worldwide, upon request. The unit will also provide support to other local law enforcement agencies' request on a case by case basis. The Canine Unit currently utilizes various breeds of canines which are all currently certified as single purpose canines.

COUNTER ASSAULT TEAM

The Counter Assault Team's (CAT) mission is to assist in the protection of individuals and venues designated by the Secret Service. This support is provided through a process that includes, but is not limited to, the development of vulnerability assessments and tactical surveys, coordination with other tactical entities, and the deployment of CAT personnel. CAT utilizes speed, surprise, maneuver, and firepower to respond to certain threats against protectees. CAT tactics call for the use of these elements to permit the Presidential Protective Division and other USSS assets to secure the protectee.

INTERESTING FACTS

The following is provided concerning some of the Uniformed Division activities at the White House Complex since January 1, 2009:

- 1,058,772 persons were screened and provided tours of the White House Mansion.
- 1,134,732 pass holders and appointments were screened into the Complex.
- 447 individuals who were not guests, Staff, or family, attempted to visit with the President. 65 Bomb threats were called into the White House Complex.
- There were 1,246 demonstrations that occurred around the Complex.
- Uniformed Division responded to 58 fire/smoke alarms.

EMERGENCY RESPONSE TEAM

The mission of the Emergency Response Team (ERT) is to provide the White House and other protected locations with compound and middle ring security. They utilize a coordinated and tactical response to neutralize penetrations and incidents within their zone of protective responsibility. The Emergency Response Team is capable of responding to threats by both organized groups and/or individuals. All ERT personnel are Uniformed Division Officers or Officials who have received specialized physical and weapons training. ERT provides protective coverage at the White House 24 hours per day, seven days per week basis.

COUNTER SNIPER SUPPORT TEAM

The Secret Service Counter Sniper Team (CS) is composed of highly qualified rifle marksmen whose responsibility is to secure the area in which a protectee is located from a possible sniper assault. To accomplish this mission they observe, locate, identify, communicate, and take necessary action to neutralize a threat within a protected area. Through the use of advance surveys, optical observation and sighting equipment, sophisticated weapons and superior vantage points, the Counter Sniper post (s) extend coverage to extreme ranges. In addition, Counter Sniper Technicians assist in the identification of aircraft and watercraft in violation of secured areas. The primary objective of this unit is to provide the highest level of long range protection. CS provides protective coverage at the White House 24 hours per day, seven days per week basis.

Readout of President Obama's Call with President Ali Bongo Ondimba of Gabon

President Obama called President Bongo Ondimba today to discuss the situation in Cote d'Ivoire. The two presidents shared their concerns about the ongoing violence, and discussed the need to end this crisis as soon as possible. President Obama reiterated his belief that former President Gbagbo needs to respect the will of the Ivorian people and end his claim to the presidency. President Obama thanked President Bongo Ondimba for his leadership and for the important role that Gabon plays as a member of the United Nations Security Council.

Statement by President Obama on the Death of Former Congressman John Adler

Michelle and I were deeply saddened to learn of the premature passing of former Congressman John Adler today.

John was a dedicated public servant who fought tirelessly for the people of New Jersey for more than two decades. John always stood by his principles, and served with an unwavering energy for the causes he believed in: creating jobs, providing tax relief for New Jersey families and standing up for seniors and veterans.

Our hearts and prayers go out to John's wife Shelley and his sons Jeffrey, Alex, Andrew and Oliver. John was taken from us far too soon, and he will be greatly missed.

Obama re-election launches with email, website

(AP) – 10 hours ago

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Barack Obama formally launched his re-election campaign Monday, urging grass-roots supporters central to his first White House run to mobilize again to protect the change he's brought over the past two years.

The official start of his second White House bid, in the midst of three wars, a budget fight with Congress, and sluggish economic recovery, comes 20 months before the November 2012 election.

"We've always known that lasting change wouldn't come quickly or easily. It never does," the Democrat said in an e-mail announcing his candidacy to more than 13 million supporters. "But as my administration and folks across the country fight to protect the progress we've made — and make more — we also need to begin mobilizing for 2012, long before the time comes for me to begin campaigning in earnest."

He told them he was filing the necessary paperwork with the Federal Election Commission, and directed them to his new campaign website where a launch video featured clips from supporters talking about their continued backing of the Democrat.

"I don't agree with Obama on everything but I respect him and I trust him," Ed from North Carolina says, delivering what's certain to become a key part of the president's pitch as he tries to re-energize liberal backers who have criticized some of his policies and independent voters who have fled from him in his first term.

Between now and the election, the incumbent Democrat will work to convince a fickle America that he has delivered change, made the right moves and earned the chance to continue the job. He will have to defend policies that have proven divisive, chief among them his sweeping health care overhaul and his efforts to boost the slow-to-rebound economy.

Obama announced his bid just as the White House is in a budget standoff with Congress that could lead to a government shutdown, weeks after the commander in chief directed U.S. military operations to a third major warfront, Libya, and days after the post-recession economy showed more signs of a rebound with a report that the still high unemployment rate had fallen to 8.8 percent.

Republicans were quick to criticize the news.

The Republican National Committee circulated a research document that accused Obama of failing to lead on the budget and entitlement spending. And former Minnesota Gov. Tim Pawlenty, a Republican competing for the chance to take on the Democrat next fall, released his own web video in which he says: "How can America win the future, when we're losing the present? In order for America to take a new direction, it's going to take a new president."

Widely expected, Obama's campaign launch was planned to coincide with the second fundraising quarter of the year. Filing paperwork will allow the president to begin raising money in earnest for what allies say could be a record-breaking haul of more than $1 billion for his campaign. That begins this month; he's slated to visit major money venues of Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles in the coming weeks.

The campaign is based in Chicago, and many of the same people from his first bid remain involved, including former campaign manager David Plouffe, who now is in the White House, and chief political strategist David Axelrod.

Managing the campaign this time is Jim Messina, who played a senior role in the first bid and in the White House. Messina has spent the past few months touring the country to lay the groundwork with donors in hopes of building a massive fundraising network featuring both large and small contributions. He's asked some 400 donors — called bundlers — to bring in at least $350,000 this year; the re-election website is geared toward raising money from grass-roots backers. Obama raised $750 million for his 2008 campaign.

Obama faces no primary challenger.

On the other side, the race for the GOP presidential nomination is just getting under way; more than a dozen Republicans are considering seeking the chance to challenge Obama in the next election. Only a few have taken the initial steps toward a candidacy; Pawlenty is among them. Several more are expected go forward to this month, including former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney, who ran in 2008 and lost the GOP nomination.

Nevertheless, Obama said he's not taking anything for granted.

"We're doing this now because the politics we believe in does not start with expensive TV ads or extravaganzas, but with you — with people organizing block-by-block, talking to neighbors, co-workers, and friends. And that kind of campaign takes time to build," he said in the note to supporters.

"So even though I'm focused on the job you elected me to do, and the race may not reach full speed for a year or more, the work of laying the foundation for our campaign must start today," Obama added. He directed them to the new red, white and blue website for what he said was "a campaign that's farther-reaching, more focused, and more innovative than anything we've built before."

The website features Obama's new campaign logo — 2012 with the rising sun in the background, a version of his 2008 campaign logo — and announces that the campaign is kicking off.

"We're opening up offices, unpacking boxes, and starting a conversation with supporters like you to help shape our path to victory, and this is where you say you're in," it says, urging people to organize and donate.

The video is a montage of testimonials from a demographically diverse group of backers who intend to stay involved in this campaign.

"It needs to reflect the changes that we've seen in the last two-and-a-half years," says Katherine from Colorado. "Then we had an underdog senator. Nobody thought that he had a chance. And now he's the president."

Gladys from Nevada adds: "We're not leaving it up to chance" and "It's an election that we have to win."

DAILY GUIDANCE FOR THE VICE PRESIDENT
Monday, April 4, 2011

In the morning, the Vice President will travel to Durham, New Hampshire, where he will visit the University of New Hampshire with Secretary of Education Arne Duncan to highlight how the University's efforts to reduce and respond to incidences of sexual violence on campus can be used as a model across the country. In remarks beginning at 11:45 AM, the Vice President and Secretary Duncan will call attention to the high rates of sexual assault and violence committed against young women in schools and on college campuses, and announce new guidance to help schools, colleges, and universities understand their civil rights obligations to better prevent and respond to sexual assault. This event is open press; the Vice President's remarks can be heard live on www.whitehouse.gov/live.

At 1:30 PM, the Vice President will attend an event with supporters of Organizing for America. This event is pooled press.

Afterwards, the Vice President will return to Washington, DC.

Subject: Statement on the Visit of German Chancellor Merkel

THE WHITE HOUSE
Office of the Press Secretary

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
April 4, 2011

Statement on the Visit of German Chancellor Merkel

President Obama and the First Lady will welcome German Chancellor Merkel and her husband, Dr. Joachim Sauer, to the White House for an official visit and State dinner on June 7, 2011. This will be the first such visit by a German chancellor or president since President Richard von Weizsäcker was hosted at the White House in 1992, two years after German reunification. Chancellor Merkel, who grew up in communist East Germany and who became Germany's first woman chancellor in 2005, received the 2010 Medal of Freedom, which the President will present to her during this visit.

The Chancellor's visit underscores the fundamental importance of the U.S.-German alliance, the depth of the friendship between our people, and our commitment to move forward together on behalf of our shared interests and values. The President and the Chancellor will discuss the broad array of issues on which the United States and Germany cooperate closely, including in Afghanistan, the Middle East, Iran, and on promoting human rights and global economic stability and growth.
